About this Coloring Book

Hi, and welcome to the Robin Wood Tarot Meditation Coloring Book!

When I made the Robin Wood Tarot, I started with pencil sketches, which I inked before I colored them in. This book has all those inked drawings, just the way they were when I colored them, although they are the size of the actual cards. (I colored them at four times the size, because Llewellyn insisted.)

At the top of each page, you'll find the name of the card, the Key from my book about the deck, and the meaning and reversed meaning from the little deck booklet that my husband, Michael Short, wrote.

Each card is on a right hand page, with the left hand page next to it left blank. That's so you can cut out the card, if you want to, and not destroy anything. You can also use that blank page for notes, so you can remind yourself about why you chose to use certain colors, or write down any epiphanies you have while coloring the cards. (If you intend to cut the cards out, you might want to keep the notes in a different place.)

Sadly, I'm not aware of any good way to have this book printed on card stock, so the cards will be too thin to shuffle. There are a couple of ways to fix that. One is to buy a blank deck. There are several available, and you can glue the colored cards to them, to make a deck you can actually use.

The second way is to copy the cards onto card stock before (or after) you color them.

I give you permission to copy the deck, as many times as needed, for your own personal use. Please don't sell them, or give out copies to non-family members. (Kids, spouses, siblings and parents are fine; but let others buy their own, please.) You can enlarge or shrink them while copying, if you want to, for use as decorations, or anything else you need to use them for. Or cut the figures out, and use them as paper dolls! Pretty much anything you like, as long as you don't give copies away, or sell them, without getting permission from me.

Mostly, I'm making this book available for those who want to really get into the deck, by coloring their own copies. When you do the coloring yourself, you might notice things about the cards that you never saw before.

Don't be limited by the colors I used on the deck, or by the drawings I did. Feel free to use colors that are meaningful to you, and to fill blank areas with your own designs. Let your imagination free as you color, and think about the meanings and symbols on each card, to make the deck your own.

Have fun with it!

Bright Blessings!

About the Tarot

A traditional Tarot Deck has 78 cards, divided into 22 Major Arcana and 56 Minor Arcana cards.

The Major Arcana cards are the Greater Secrets, or Trumps, and are numbered 0 through 21. Each has a name, as well (The Fool, The Magician, etc.) They are what Jung would have called Archetypes, representing images and patterns which form the roots of everything else. In a reading, they symbolize forces the Seeker has no control over.

The Minor Arcana is divided into four suits, Pentacles, Swords, Wands and Cups, which each have a King, Queen, Knight, Page, and ten “pip” cards numbered 1 through 10.

The Pentacles are traditionally associated with the classical element of Earth, with quiet strength, rest, and peace, as well as richness, wisdom, and sensuality. The direction of the Pentacles is North, and the time is Midnight. Most of the people in this deck are alone, engaging in quiet, restful, creative pursuits. They are gaining knowledge, which requires some solitude to absorb the lessons learned elsewhere, distilling them into wisdom. Traditionally, the people in this suit have dark hair and eyes, which I tried to reflect when I colored the deck, but you certainly don't have to when you color yours, unless you find meaning there.

The Swords are one of the two suits that are associated with Air in some decks, and Fire in others. (The other is Wands.) I was aware of this when I drew the cards, and thought about it for a while before I chose to associate Swords with Air in my deck. I eventually went this direction because of a bunch of reasons, but the central one was that this suit is associated with knowledge, which is sharp, and cuts both ways.

Which meant that Wands would be associated with Fire. Some of my friends were very unhappy that I chose the way I did, and explained that Fire would burn up the wands. I had thought that was part of the point; the wands were fuel for the fire. But the more I thought, the more I realized they were much more than that; Fire is associated with willpower, and wands are used to channel the will. That's why I made them magic wands, and most I saw as metal. You can color them all as if they are made of wood if you want, though!

So, in this deck, Swords are associated with Air, with action, courage, trouble, authority, health and gathering knowledge, which can be a very painful pursuit. Their direction is the East, their time, Morning. The cards of this suit deal with sacrifice, redemption, and transformation. Traditionally, the people here are those with dark hair and light eyes.

Wands are associated with Fire, with growth, will, business, negotiations, family, and nimble speech. Their direction is South, their time is Noon. The cards here deal with struggle, focusing the will, self-control, creativity, and using energy wisely. The people on these cards traditionally have blond or red hair, and light eyes.

Finally, the suit of Cups is associated with Water, and with the whole range of emotional matters; friendship, love, contentment, soul-searching, and discontent, as well as imagination, dreams and healing. The direction is West, the time is Evening. This suit is all about handling emotions, from healing friendship and love to disillusionment and despair, from aspirations, dreams and fantasies to longing and abandonment. Everything that comes from the heart, and flows like the tides. The people on these cards have light hair and eyes.

I've arranged the cards in the order listed above; Majors first, then the Pentacles, Swords, Wands and Cups from highest to lowest. Ace, King, Queen, Knight, Page, then 10 through 2. This is the way they're arranged in the little booklet that comes with my deck, and after some discussion, I decided to keep that order.

I have also decided not to try to tell you how to use the deck in this book. This is for meditation, after all. If you don't know how to read the cards, I have some information about that on my website, at <http://robinwood.com/LivingtreeGrove/Tarot/TarotSet.html>

I have also written a book about my deck, specifically, which tells you more about the symbols I chose, and why I chose them, and also has a section about reading the cards, the history of the Tarot, and a short section about how to play Tarocchi, which is the game the deck was invented for. You can find that on my site at <http://robinwood.com/Catalog/Books/BookPages/RWTDeck.html> if you're interested. (I also have it on Amazon, in both print and Kindle editions.)

And, of course, there are dozens and dozens of other books that will tell you how to read, and what the cards are all about, as well.
